Mr. Tucker is a trial lawyer with forty four years+ experience trying cases, most involving employment, personal injury and general civil law. He practices in courts at all levels. The focus of his practice is employment law on behalf of individuals. Mr. Tucker represents executives and professionals entering and leaving employment. He counsels employees having difficulty with their employers. He has extensive successful experience with covenants not to compete and recovering money for individuals who have compensation disputes. He occasionally represents selected employers.

Jeffery Londa, a defense attorney with OgletreeDeakins, was quoted in Law 360 as saying "...[A] lawyer whom I respect and who I do not relish seeing on the other side of my cases is Eliot Tucker because I know he will legitimately make me work hard. Eliot is an excellent lawyer. Eliot represents high-level executives in employment cases. He partners with his clients and effectively uses them in the discovery process. This makes him very effective, and he makes me work hard."

He is also described by his peers as "in a class of his own" and "in court, he's a born winner," as reported in Chambers & Partners USA, America's Leading Business Lawyers, 2003-2004.

Mr. Tucker frequently lectures about employment law to other lawyers at continuing legal education seminars, was an Adjunct Professor of Civil Trial Advocacy at the University of Houston School of Law from 1988 to 1996, and was the 1996-1997 Chair of the Labor and Employment Law Section of the Houston Bar Association.
